In the Slayton town in a small house lived a woman named Susie. She was obviously overweight but that didn't stop her from searching for a man. She had an account on Tinder so that she was finding dates. So she had a problem moving around because of her weight, that's why dates always were coming to her house. She was always complaining about that they weren't in her life for too long. There was this one man who stayed for the longest. His name was Robert and he was really shy, that's why he never touched her in an unappropriate way. She was very sad about it, so Susie was always trying to give him a hint. One night Robert finally made a move. They were watching a film when he slowly took her hand. Maybe you could hug me, my cutie pie? she asked and she made more space for him. Sure - he answered slowly and hugged her from the back. They went back to watching film, but Robert started to feel like he couldn't breathe so he was trying to tell her, but he couldn't he didn't remember what happened, but when he woke up he immediately ran away from under her. She stopped watching movie, got up slowly and chased after him, but she wasn't in hurry. Robert opened the door however he didn't see the open space but multiple bodies of that man. He stared blankly and his face turned white when he felt her breath on his neck. Why would you try to run away from me? Susie spoke, but Robert couldn't even say a word because he had a lump in his throat. I'm very sad now you need to hug me - she announced and hacked him with all her strength. The sound of breaking bones was hurt in the whole house but nobody could hear him screaming because his face was lost in her chest. When 30 minutes passed like him, she threw Robert in a closet. Another one left me - she said sadly and went back to watching the movie. Men need to look out for themselves because Susie is always waiting.
